

Chefs Naked for Autism

Twelve chefs; each, naked in a kitchen; promoting autism acceptance to end bullying, improve employment, and the stigma associated with the condition, bare it all for a great cause.

As a social media marketing campaign this series of photos will spread quickly around the world, bringing with it plenty of press coverage and creating a new message of autism acceptance in the general community.

Bare it all for autism acceptance!

Advertising Pays

In the past decade, autism awareness has reached a staggering 99% of Americans. But only 32.7% accept the condition, and have taken the time to understand it and those who live with it every day. Statistically, that's the same percentage as those affected directly or indirectly by it.

The worst part is that bullying and crimes against the autistic haven't diminished, and employment opportunities haven't increased significantly, leaving an 85% unemployment rate for those who want to work.

Acceptance is only gained through education and sometimes to launch a campaign, one has to make a dramatic entrance, which we think "Chefs Naked for Autism" will become.

It will bring our message to the media and to social media, and convey an important set of facts to the world, primarily that every person with autism is a citizen. Oh, and we hope it creates jobs in kitchens for people on the spectrum who want to work.

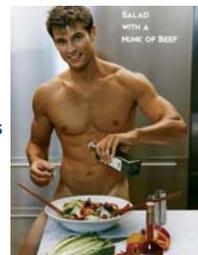

If you opt to be one of the first dozen, joining the list below, you can expect great fame for your efforts, as well.

Each month, a new naked chef delivers the goods for autism by baring all for the cause.

Chefs Bare All for a Cause

Autism Citizen works to create a very happy world for those with autism by educating others about the condition and teaching professionals, government employees and manages as well as business leaders and workers about the condition.

We also have dedicated ourselves to building a huge network of those we've trained so that future employers can verify an applicant's knowledge of the condition and people needing professionals and services can find an autism-friendly resource.

Creating Solutions

Many nonprofit organizations dedicated to autism are researching cures, treatments and prevention which we applaud, but there's far more to do and solutions are needed for those who cope with the condition every day.

Autism is a spectrum disorder and so no two people with the condition are ever exactly the same. By looking at the commonalities across the spectrum, we've been able to come up with a few innovative projects, and solutions to issues like communicating with medical doctors and hospital stay special needs care.

Chefs Naked for Autism isn't a fundraising campaign, though it may have that affect. The goal isn't money, but acceptance.

Each chef will be photographed in a studio kitchen, and nothing improper will be shown.

What's normally private will remain private. The images create the illusion, not display the detail.

We're asking you to join us in this amazing social media project, backed by Epicurus.com.

Oh, do you remember "Alex from Target"? Well that image spread to more than 550 million people around the world in seven days. If the photo of a teenage cashier can do it, so too will your photo in support of a great cause.
